The Actresses of Paris at a Ball.

Of course the boxes on the main tier were all filled with the prettiest and best dressed actresses of Paris; and equally, of course, everybody on the dateing floor stared up at these boxes, and people tumbled over each other or ran against each other in rather lively fashion, for the crowd was very dense. Bat the boxes were worth looking at for the sake of the occupants and their toilets. First, in one of the main proseenium boxes, sat Mme. Judio, in a slupping Pierrette costume of deep rollow orape, with a high pointed hat in yellow satio, decorated with yellow cockades, and wearing long black lace mittens, black silk stockings, and yellow shoes with high heels. With her lovely dark eyes glancing from under the shar dow of her yollow hat, she looks very charming. Alice Lody, who is just nineteen, occupies the next bex, and shows conspicuous, not only by reason of her delicate and refined beauty, but because of the splendid necklade of dismonds and emeralds that is clasped around her slender, girlish throat. A little further on we come to the beg of the Camedie Francis, where Mme. Lloyd shows supreme in black lace and many colored roses, and pretty Jeanne Samary looks prottier than ever in her simple ball dress. Next, we have little Mily Meyer, of the Renaissance, whose levely childish face peers out of the depths of a huge pink satio bonnet, as hig as a partwheel, and looks all the more piquant for the novel neadgear. From the Oleon, we have Mme. Leonide Leblace in a white satin dress blazing with diamonds, and Helene Monnier of the Gymnase is with her, also in a very elegant toilet of white satio. The Vaudeville may boast of having sent out the belle of the evening in the person of Mile. Dav . ray; superbly attired in a ball dress of pale pick grape and satio that fixed her exquisite form with glove like perfection, with her colu tiful arms bired to shoulder, and a white plums fistoped by a disproud bandeau in her dark hair, she carries off the paim of beauty ucques tionably. Amid the dancers figure prominent ly two of the late girl laureaces of the Conservatoirs-Mile Berger, with a broad straw hat shading her powd rid trasses, and the bewitching little Sizes of the O leon in the simplest possible costume of white cashmere, but adore ed better than with lace; and diamonds by the freshness of her girlish bloom and the brightness of her laughing dark eyes. Poor, pretty children-the first jist 16 and the second but little over 17 - what are they doing here in this mad whirt?

Reason not of them friends-Look and pass on!

Herr is Gabrielle Gauthier, of the Variaties, beautiful to behold in ber spleodid and accurate costume of a Merveille use; it is in pale blue crape, richly worked with siever and the head drees is a torsade of pick crave, held down with dramond pies and shaded with pale plak and blue feathers. It is one if the richest and most characteristic cost tumes of which the ball can bosse. Kate Mun roe is dressed as Diana, in a short, white satio hair. Five years ago she was a very dream of beauty-exquisite in form, in feature and in coloring. Now changed by the help of art from a radiant brunette to a lusterless blonde, the open dazzling American girl has undergone wonderful and not altogether favorable trans formation into an English burlesquer or opera bouffist—a being of the type whereof Lydia l'hompson was the perfected specimen. Here is Gabrielle Elluici in male attire, as a Louis XV. bridegroom, a rich, but altogether unbecoming costume, consisting of a white satin vest and full skirted coat, and white felt hat, turned up at the side with a cluster of orange blossoms and streaming with white satin ribbons. Her sister accompanied her in the dress of a bride, but it eaunot be said that the party looks very bridal. The beautiful Angele of the Varieties looks (xzeedicg'y bandsome in a rich Spanish costume, which sets off to advantage her glowing and luxuriant charms. One of the prettiest costumes of the evening is word by Mile. Charret, who is dressed as Heart's ease, in lilac orane and purple velvet, with a great velvet heart's- ase in her hair and one in her breast; she also carries a huge bouquet of that flower. Mile. Lead Asco of the Renaisance, shows resplendent as a pilgrim, in a white silk gown, bordered with silver scallop shells, and a broad white felt hat, looped with similar shelle; her pilgrim's staff is in silver, deco rated with white ribbons. Very pretty is the costume of Mile. Marie Lebon, who is dressed as a Forge! ne not, in a short blue satin dress, looped and garlanded with wreatts of that dainty szure flower. Another dress, representing winter, is very effective, and we recommend it to cur lady readers for reproduction. It corsists of a short skirt of silver ti-sue, bordered with swapslowe, and an overskirt of white saile also bordered with swans dowc, as is the long, tight, low-necked cuirass corsage. On the head a hood, with a deep cape of silver tissue, bordered with swansdowo, and the same soft trimming edges the top of the white sain boots with eilver beels. The crowd, at first, was too dense for much dancing; but about 2 o'clock the promit naders began to disappear' so the actresses left their boxes, and the yourgest and prettiest among them enjoyed their waltz; and quadrilles with all the true zest of girls out on a frolic .-The elder Ocquelio, too, distinguished himself by the gayety and spirit wherewith he led off and novel spectacle. For a fice cobby suit of CLOTHING see S. DEALHAM, 62 King st., corner Faufax.
